Soud,

Just to confirm the correct steps of workflow:

- Administrators create project and upload the text that need to be translated
- Break it in microtasks and assign those tasks to different editors or to one editor user
- Each editor user will observe the translations of their tasks by any translator user
- If the translators finished translating a whole project, that project will start a "peer review" phase that any of Crowdlator users can vote the translations
- If we have 50-50 case than the "super editor" will vote and review it to decide if it is finished or needs improvements.
- When the project is finished the administrator should generate a script of translated text and assign it to some youtube video or soundcloud as a subtitles online via API.

Now if my description was correct, in what page should administrator upload the text that need to be translated. Why we don't put it in the "create new project" page, since I did not see it in the wireframes ?

Best,
Trim Kadriu

Trim,

You've got it right and it'll be wise to put the upload transcript function on the create project page. I must have missed it out. Just to clarify, for the Soundcloud bit, we are actually getting people to record their recitals of the transcripts on to Soundcloud and voting on those.
